For: This guide is for all MBA applicants, as well as HR staff, career advisors and MBA programs. Every year, thousands of students around the world send in their applications to business schools. There is a rush to get into the most sought after programs and even harder job interviews. Instead of doing an MBA with the intention of making a 10-year impact, it is all about making the next move, networking and achieving the next level of success. Because it's all about positioning yourself for the next step in your career. This free guide is aimed at helping you achieve your career goals by highlighting tips, tricks and strategies from the elite MBA programs. Why This Guide is Essential: The reason this guide is essential is because it provides a detailed look into how you can start a conversation with any MBA admissions committee. This guide includes enough information to cover just about everything you'll need for your case submission. You're likely to receive one to two case submissions anyway, so take advantage of that fact and compile an insightful case nearby mobile phone service provider as an alternative form of pay. Those who chose to use their cell phone were instructed to dial the number during the survey times using their mobile phone. A typical sample was selected by phone numbers 1,001-1,002. The length of the call was limited to 20 minutes and the call was repeated three times if the selected household failed to answer. The first call was made at the beginning of the week and the last at the end of the week. The participation rate was 97.9%. In total, 95.5% of the selected households received the phone calls. The final sample included 4,989 individuals. The sampling rate was 82.6% of the number of invitees (the number of people invited to participate in the study
